That fatal and dreaded disease, scarlet fever, has visited some of the best families of our city, and several of the loved ones, so dear to the parent's heart, have been plucked from them forever. Some of the sweetest flowers that have ever budded in a mother's heart, while the dew-drops of early morning still lingered, have been caused to wither by the foul touch of this blighting disease. The cases seem limited, but it seems to loom to linger where the brightest and fairest flowers blossom.

To-day Lexington is the scene of bustle and confusion, crowded with strangers from all parts of the United States. Strange faces are seen on every street; clerical looking individuals dressed in their solemn suits of black cloth and white neckerchiefs, with their dignified, staid and educated bearing, can be seen on every hand while the quick, perceptible, wide-awake looking individual, dressed in the height of the fashion, with a quick, restless air but with a happy, cheerful face, and a ready and happy greeting, tell us at a glance that they are gentlemen from a distance, visiting our city for the purpose of attending the races. Gentlemen, you are all heartily welcomed, and when you shall have returned to your many homes may it at least be with a pleasant recollection of your visit to Lexington, and with a wish sometime to visit our city again.

Mysterious Darkness in Minnesota. (St. Paul Pioneer-Press.)

Last Sunday was a memorable dark day in Meeker County. About 12 m. darkness commenced overshadowing the earth, and at 2 p. m. it was as dark as it was at 8 p. m. It seemed strange to see the whole of Litchfield eating dinner by lamp-light. The darkness continued, more or less, till the evening shades closed in for the night. Monday morning the atmosphere appeared natural. Chickens went to roost and stayed there till next morning. Canary birds sang their evening song at 1 p. m., and remained silent till next morning. The heavy clouds and storm did not seem to justify such a change. The atmosphere resembled an eclipse, but far more dense and deeper darkness.

A PARLIAMENTARY HOG.

A Story That One Canadian Member at Least Doesn't Tell.

Among the railway travelers eating dinner at a hotel in Belleville the other day was a fellow who swallowed meat, potatoes and bread as if he had been a week without eating.

A second cup of coffee was brought to him, and in his hurry he picked it up and took a large swallow. It was considerably hotter than pepper, and in his excitement he opened his mouth and shot the liquid across the table against a young man's shirt bosom.

"Gosh—wheet—hot—beg pardon—blazes!" he exclaimed, reaching for the water.

"You are a hog, sir!" replied the young man—"a regular hog."

"I am, eh?"

"Yes, sir."

"And I've got bristles?"

"Yes, you have."

"And I grunt?"

"Yes."

"Stranger," said the man, as he reached across the table after another slapjack, "stranger, I'm not a hog. I'm only an M. P. bound for Ottawa."

Capture of an Indian Desperado. (Headline of Enterprise.)

Joaquin, the noted Indian desperado, who has been a terror in these parts for several years past, was captured by William B. Reynolds on last Monday night, at a rancharia on the ranch of Frank Cunningham, about three miles from this city, down Dry Creek. The particulars of the capture, as related by Mr. Reynolds, are quite interesting. He heard that Joaquin was at the above rancharia, and procuring the assistance of John Edgington and Chas. Brumfield went to the above named place, and after taking a reconnaissance of the ground distributed his posse at places so as to prevent a possible escape of the outlaw. Bill then went about with a candle in one hand and a pistol in the other, examining the different "Injuns" as they lay in groups asleep. He was just about giving up the chase when he noticed a group of three squaws, and from their peculiar manner of repose, thought that the culprit might possibly be among them. He noticed that one of them was lying a few inches higher than the rest. His next step was to see how many nether limbs there might be in that group.

This he had to do byocular inspection, which he did, and discovered that there were eight instead of six, two of which were covered with overalls. He caused the elevated squaw to roll down from her perch, and there, underneath her, was the long sought outlaw, and before the Indian had a chance to spring for his pistol, a large Colt's revolver, Bill leveled his "bull dog" at his head and told him to lie still or he would blow his brains out. He then called to Edgington, who proceeded to tie him. The prisoner was brought to this city, and the next day taken to Santa Rosa. Joaquin is described as a man weighing about 180 pounds, six feet in height, well built, and of large muscular development. There had been several futile attempts made before to capture him. A reward of $100 had been offered for his arrest dead or alive, by John Walker and others of Sebastopol, whose life he had threatened. He was a terror among the Indians here, and yet they sought to conceal him, and Mr. Reynolds was often warned by them and told that Joaquin would surely shoot him, as he was well armed.

Hydraulics on a Railroad.

(Sacramento Union.)

The methods of hydraulic mining have been employed with great success in clearing away the heavy slides of earth which occurred recently on the Central Pacific Railway above Alta. The mass of earth was so great, and the difficulty of handling it in the ordinary way so formidable, that unless water had been resorted to several weeks might have elapsed before the track was cleared. But the hydraulic miners were called upon for help, and they found the situation one which presented no perplexities to them. They brought up their pipes and monitors, constructed a flume from a ditch which was, fortunately, near at hand, and in fourteen hours piped away a body of debris which had been the despair of picks and shovels. The tremendous power of hydraulic mining methods has been here exhibited in a very practical way, and for the benefit of the community. Those who witnessed the swift dispatch of this avalanche of earth have attained a lively perception of the effects produced upon the bluffs which contain the gravel deposits. It is, indeed, somewhat singular that the hydraulic monitor has never, so far as we are aware, been used in making cuts on railways where the soil is sufficiently soft to be piped. It might be thought that in such cases there would be great economy in the application of water power, for a strong head of water directed by an experienced hand will cut out and carry away more dirt in one day than fifty men could shovel and pick in a week. The slide at Alta would have undoubtedly delayed the resumption of railroad travel very much longer but for the happy thought of enlisting the monitors and little giants in the work of clearing the track.

Unpublished Letter of Garrick. (Athenaeum.)

CHELTHAM, Aug. 18, 1746. DEAR FRANK—To convince you how much I regard you as a man, & esteem you as an artist, I have broke thro' my natural aversion to writing in order to keep my promise to you. I came to this place last Thursday, & damn'd dull place it is, notwithstanding we have Balls twice a week, assembles every night, & the facetious Mr. Foote to Crown the whole. He is full of spirits, abounds in Pleasantry, plays at Whist for five pounds a Rubber, wears laced Frocks with dirty shirts, and to the eternal mortification of the Beaux Esprits he has renounced the stage for ever, & so, as Bayes says (farewell to Genius, humour and all that for damn him if he plays any more. I have drank the waters and they agree very well with me, but I have unfortunately got a Boil under the waist-

band of my Breeches that greatly discomposes me, & perhaps my want of Relish for the pleasure of Cheltenham may be chiefly owing to that; you shall know when you see me. * * * I shall now send on my thoughts upon "Othello," the scene which in my opinion will make the best picture is that point of time in the last act, when "Emilia" discovers to "Othello" his error abt the handkerchief:

Emil, O, thou dost Moor! that handkerchief, etc. Here at once the whole catastrophe of the play is unravell'd and the group of figures in the scene with their different expressions will produce a finer effect in painting than perhaps any other in all Shakespeare, though as yet never thought of by any of the designers, who have published their several prints upon the same author, the background you know must have "Desdemona" murdered in her bed, the characters upon the stage are "Othello," "Montano," "Gratiano," and "Iago," "Othello" (the principal) upon the right hand (I bely) must be thunderstruck with horror, his whole figure extended, with his eyes turned up to Heaven, and his frame sinking as it were, at "Emilia's" discovery.

I shall better make you conceive my notion of this attitude and expression when I see you; Emil must appear in the greatest vehemence, with a mixture of sorrow, on account of her mistress and I think she'd be in the middle, "Iago" on the left hand she'd express the greatest perturbation of mind, and she'd shrink up his body at the opening of his villainy, his eyes looking a-kance (as Milton terms it) on "Othello" and gnawing his lip in anger at his wife, but this will likewise be better described by giving you the expression when I see you, the other less capital characters must be affected according to the circumstances of the scene, and as they are more or less concerned in the catastrophe, I could say a great deal upon the choice of this scene, but I hate writing, and if the little I have said does not strike you, pray don't fix upon it out of complaisance to me, I am in doubt whether you should not have Shakespeare's words engraved at the bottom of each print that have reference to it; the objection of writing the name of the sign under it does not hold good in this for it will be necessary by the speech to mark the exact point of time you have chose to represent. It is with the greatest pleasure I have observed your late application to your business. I beg you will continue it for your own sake, you are now at the time of life you should employ almost every moment of it in your business, and in the next ten years make yourself easy in fame and fortune. Your strength of body and mind is now at the height and every avocation from y'r business, is so much money and immortality lost (think of that Master Ford) and go on and prosper, I believe you are by this time heartily tired as I am, if you care to write to me, do; but make yourself easy if you have no inclination, and provided you give me a good account of your time at our next meeting; I will excuse that irksome ceremony to you of answering the letters of Your sincere friend & Humble servant, D. GARRICK.

"Darius Green" in Germany.

A new flying machine has been tried at Leipzig with scant success. It is the invention of a German aeronaut, and consists of a balloon from which are suspended three cars, each of these having ten or twelve wings which are set in motion by a crank. On the first trial the inventor occupied the central car, and his assistants the others, and on the rope being cut the balloon ascended very slowly, then grazed the roofs of the houses and began to sway so violently that the assistants jumped out in terror. The machine at once shot up with great velocity, and on reaching the altitude of four thousand feet, burst and fell to the ground. Nevertheless Herr Baumgarten asserts that he was not much hurt, and intends to repeat his experiment outside of the town, believing that the contact of the housetops spoils his scheme by injuring the balloon.

An American Honeymoon.

(London Society.) A friend of mine was introduced the other day to a very charming young American lady at Geneva. With that naive and frankness characteristic of Yankee woman-kind, she soon informed him that she was spending her honeymoon in Europe. "That must be very delightful," exclaimed my friend. "Yes," was her reply, "I enjoy it immensely." Then it occurred to him that he had seen nothing of the lady's husband. "Your husband is not here to-day, then?" he added. He says he shall not easily forget the comical expression of amusement and surprise upon her face as she answered, with a merry laugh, "My husband here! Why, he is not with me! I left him in New York." This idea of a honeymoon is unique. I wonder if the husband was enjoying his honeymoon with equal zest on the other side of the Atlantic? Perhaps he was.

GLUCOSE.

THE EFFECT THIS MODERN ARTICLE OF COMMERCE IS LIKELY TO HAVE UPON THE COMMUNITY.

HOW ADULTERATIONS IN SUGAR ACT UPON THE HUMAN SYSTEM.

CERTAIN TRUTHS REGARDING DELICATE PORTIONS OF THE BODY WHICH ARE NOT GENERALLY KNOWN.

HOW THEY ARE DISORDERED AND HOW CONTROLLED.

Everybody is talking about glucose, the new element which is being used in sugar; and, indeed, in so important a matter as the sugar we consume it is only natural that people should talk. Sugar in its pure state is a valuable element to the human system, but when adulterated by filtering through bone dust, or by the mixture of other matters, instead of nourishing, it then irritates the kidneys and other parts of the body. The relation between the kidneys and adulterated sugar is that of open hostility. Indeed, it acts like a violent poison upon those delicate members and produces Bright's disease (Albuminuria) sooner than any known cause. For this reason many persons use brown sugar entirely, realizing the delicacy of the kidneys and the necessity of avoiding any irritation. But, notwithstanding this care, kidney difficulties are the most universal complaint of the present day. They are caused by impure sugars, by colds, by over-exertion, by indigestion, and by nervous exhaustion. Those who have kidney troubles seldom know it, as their manifestations are headaches, pains in the joints, great weariness and loss of appetite. On this account they are all the more dangerous and require attention as soon as any of the symptoms are observed. The difficulty has always been in the past to know what to do for diseased kidneys, and, until recently, they have been considered incurable. A pure vegetable extract, however, Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, has been thoroughly tested, and proven to instantly relieve all minor troubles, and as a remedy for the most severe cases, whether they arise from colds, exhaustion, indigestion or bad sugars. Glucose has not been shown to be an absolutely injurious element in the preparation of food, but that adulterated sugars are a dangerous element when brought in contact with the kidneys has been proven beyond a doubt, while no discovery of modern times seems a entirely adapted to nourish and stimulate the kidneys as the remedy above mentioned. It acts directly upon those parts and upon no others. It stimulates and at the same time nourishes. Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure has, therefore, become a standard article of household use, and is sold by druggists universally. At all seasons of the year and under all circumstances it is a remedy which should be kept on hand, for where such interests are at stake, it becomes invaluable.
